1. DECIDE ON YOUR TYPE OF SEATING.

Most events that include a sit-down dinner should at least have assigned tables to ensure good flow and distribution. If your menu includes meal choices, assigned seating at the table itself is recommended so the staff knows where to take each meal. No Assigned Seating is ideal for casual events, or those with a focus on cocktails and hors d'oeuvres service, rather than a sit down meal.

3. DRAW YOUR SEATING CHART

Once you know you how many tables you need for you guest count and the layout at your venue, you can start drawing your seating chart. Poster paper and color coded post-it notes are a great way to do it the hands-on way, but you can also find chart-makers online.

Note: When drawing your seating chart, be sure to have at least 60" between each table for service staff to fit and for guests to easily move around.

SEATING TIPS

- 1) Categorize guests into groups before you start such as how you know them (For example: college friends, friends of the family, work people, etc) This will help guide your seating.
- 2) Arrange tables so that everyone is sitting with a least one person they know.
- 3) Avoid having a singles table. This usually make people feel awkward.
- 4) If there are any conflicts amongst your guests, be sure to make a note for yourself and seat accordingly.
- 5) Give VIP guests such as close family and friends the best views and easy access to the head table.
- 6) Any guests in wheelchairs should be seated close to an exit or along the dance floor, so they'll have plenty of space to maneuver out as needed.
- 7) Get your parents to help you seat family members who they may know better.
- 8) Seat younger guests and those more likely to dance closest to the band.

4. DIRECTING GUESTS TO THEIR SEATS

Escort cards include a name and a table number to direct guests to their table.

Place cards at each table setting are used for assigned seating at the tables themselves.

A seating chart/board is an alternative to using escort cards.

5. TABLE NUMBERS

When choosing how to display your table numbers, make sure they are large enough for all to see, as well as easy to see from various angles so that guests can find their seat easily.
